Fate of the Critics

Our Presidents have seldom used a competent Communist critic since 1933, and we have reaped the harvest, South Vietnam. The CIA fiascoes were continuous until the President appointed Admiral William Raborn its head, but when Juan Bosch, Sukarno and Kwame Nkrumah were demoted, Raborn was known to be on the way out. The U.S. State Department's friendliness to our enemy countries was carried forward until Communist critic Assistant Secretary Thomas C. Mann became a marked man, and the President decided he could not save his fellow Texan. Averell Harriman, the all time loser for freedom, was dispatched from the Manila Meeting to wherever he could do the most harm. Walt Rostow, Will Bundy and others of their philosophy are kept available for vital missions. Constructive opponents to the one-party system fail to speak out on these subjects.
